Wildcats Take SEC Title By Beating Florida, Auburn, Mississippi And Alabama

Title Is Sixth For Kentucky In Southeastern

By BOB ADAIR

Kentucky's Wildcats gained their fifth Southeastern conference basketball championship by the tournament route by emerging victorious over Florida, Mississippi, Auburn, and Alabama in the Jefferson county Armory at Louisville last week-end. The Wildcats also claimed the Southeastern crown another year when the tourney was not held, making a grand total of six championships for the Big Blue.

The Wildcats held off a second-half rally by the underdog Florida 'Gators' to take a 42-36 decision in the final game of the first round. Carl Staker and Marvin Akers, aided by the great floor work of Erma Allen, combined 19 points to give the Cats a lead which the 'Gators' could not overcome.

OUT FORM

Careful Adolph Rupp's cagers were way off form in at least part of every game until the final battle with the Crimson Tide of Alabama. Although the Cats ran up the largest margin of victory in the tournament, a 27 point advantage over Mississippi's Rebels they didn't hit their stride until the championship game Saturday night.

MEL BREWER HITS IT

Mel Brewer played his best game at the pivot spot against Mississippi, racking up 11 points to lead the Cats to a 59-32 victory. Kenny England, one of the outstanding guards of the tourney, hung up nine markers to take second place in the scoring column against the Rebels.

Kentucky supporters got a big scare Saturday afternoon when Auburn's Plainsmen, conquerors of Vanderbilt and Tulane, ran up a 10-0 lead before Erma Allen tipped one in after five minutes had elapsed. Coach Jordan's boys, including the two leading scorers in the conference, Manci and Hawkins, were hitting from all angles and took a 12 point lead with only three minutes remaining in the first half. The Cats cut the margin to seven points as the period ended but there were only eight minutes left in the game when the Blue cagers overcame the Tigers' advantage and went on to win 40-31. Jim King paced the Cats with 11 tallies and Erma Allen followed with nine. Manci took scoring honors for the game with 13 points before he fouled out late in the battle.

The largest crowd ever to see a basketball game in the South, 8,500 fans, turned out for the final game. Everyone had expected a Kentucky-Tennessee fracas but Alabama turned the Tide on the Vols 21-18.

The championship battle saw an inspired bunch of Alabama Red Elephants, who had upset the mighty charges of Johnny Mauer in the first semi-final tilt, come from behind to take 6-4 lead over Kentucky in a see-saw battle in which the lead changed eight times and in

For The Latest Addition

A chance for everyone in the University to say "Congratulations" to the bacon-tugging UK Wildcats will be given tomorrow at 10 in Memorial hall, when President Donovan has called a special Victory Convocation.

With another Southeastern scalpstrapping at their belts, the 'Cat coaches and players will all be there, and every student at the University has been called to pay tribute to their achievement.

Those who were at the Louisville outing, as well as those who got their share second-hand via the air waves, will have a last chance to recognize the latest addition to UK's string of top-notch net teams.

Tomorrow morning is one time when it will be definitely hard-taste to show up in the Grill during convocation hour. —Editor.

WILDCAT REVIEW TO INTERVIEW TOP STUDENTS

Kernel's Editor To Appear First On Weekly Show

Outstanding students of the several departments in the arts and science college will be interviewed on the Wildcat review as a new feature of the University radio studio's regular Saturday noon broadcast.

Designed to encourage scholarship in the college, the new radio feature is sponsored by a faculty committee. Richard Adams, English instructor, will interview the students each week.

Bob Ammons, editor of The Kernel, has been chosen for an interview on Saturday's program. It was announced yesterday by Adams.

One student from each of the 27 departments in the college will be on the program, as far as possible, it was announced yesterday. Students with a standing of 2.0 or better will be given preference.

Heads of the departments will name several students from which one will be chosen for each broadcast. The interview will concern the student's major interest.

The new five-minute feature is part of the regular 30-minute program originating in the University studios and transcribed to station WHAS, Louisville.

Chosen for the first broadcast, Ammons, a junior student from Lexington, is majoring in English. As a freshman, he tied for the Phi Beta Kappa scholarship award.

He is a member of Omicron Delta Kappa, men's honorary leadership honorary; a pledge of Seaboard and Blade, advanced military society; and the Student Government Association.

Stall Elected

Bernard Stall III has been elected president of the Pryor Pre-Med society. He will replace Si Holmes, who has left school to go into the armed forces.

'CATS SLATED TO PLAY IN N.C.A.A. TOURNEY

Coach Rupp Says Nothing Definite Planned As Yet

Kentucky has been named by the Associated Press as one of the almost certain teams to land in the eastern division of the national collegiate basketball tournament. The Wildcats practically assured themselves of an invitation by winning the Southeastern conference tournament in Louisville last week.

Illinois, winner of the Big Ten title, also was named as a probable eastern entry in the tournament to be held in New Orleans March 20 to 21. The western division tournament will be held at the same time in Kansas City. Winners of the two divisions will meet in Kansas City on March 28 to determine the new N. C. A. A. champion. Wisconsin gained the crown last year.

Colorado is the only team which has been mentioned as the most probable starter in the western tournament. Winner of the Rocky Mountain's Big Seven Conference, Colorado was the only major team to finish the current season undefeated.

Each division will be composed of eight teams, and the remaining outfits will be determined by tournaments in the various conferences, and the winners of the leagues in which they play.

Sonia Berkowitz Elected President Of Women's Group

Wildcats To Be Honored At Special Convocation For Southeastern Win

Allen Selected On AP All-Conference First Team

Erma Allen, Kentucky's fleet and fighting forward, was the only Wildcat selected on the All Southeastern conference AP first team by a poll of coaches, sportswriters, and officials. Jim King and Marvin Akers were selected on the second team.

Allen was the only regular forward to make the first five, since Dick Mehen, Vol center, was picked for the other forward position. It is the general opinion that Allen was a unanimous choice for the forward position.

An unusual incident occurred when the final poll was recorded. Three of the first five all conference players selected are centers. Wheeler Leeth of Alabama was named for the pivot spot, and Shag Hawkins, Auburn star center, was picked for a guard position along with Louis Adair of Alabama.

The complete first and second teams are as follows:

First Team

Erma Allen, F. (Kentucky)
Dick Mehen, F. (Tennessee)
Wheeler Leeth, C. (Alabama)
Shag Hawkins, G. (Auburn)
Louis Adair, G. (Alabama)

Second Team

Bobby Moore, F. (Georgia)
Bernie Mehen, F. (Tennessee)
Jim King, C. (Kentucky)
Marvin Akers, G. (Kentucky)
Mike Balitsaris, G. (Tennessee)

Engineer College Sends New Plan For Education

A stream-lined educational plan for new students in the engineering college is explained in letters mailed from the college this week to high school graduates throughout the state.

Beginning at the first quarter on June 11, the course will include algebra, English composition, general inorganic chemistry, engineering drawing, military science, and physical education. This schedule will total 20 hours of classwork each week.

While no definite assurance can be given, it is expected that students who are doing good work will be deferred from military service until they complete their courses of study. Prof. W. E. Freeman, assistant dean, announced.

FIRST MUSICAL OPEN LECTURE SET FOR TODAY

Lambert Talks On Beethoven's Music At Third Hour

First musical open lecture in the history of the University will be held this morning when Prof. Carl A. Lambert speaks on "Beethoven, the Man and the Musician" the third hour in the band room of the Music Center. Records will be played to illustrate the various phases of the composer's life.

Professor Lambert, in an interview yesterday, explained that the lecture will be conducted rather informally. "We're going to give everyone a good time, and if anyone is dissatisfied he can have his money back," he remarked.

After each record has been played there will be a discussion of that particular composition in relation to Beethoven's life. Professor Lambert said that the "Pastoral Symphony" will be played first to illustrate the lighter side of the composer. The little cuckoo calls and trills will be pointed out and commented upon. More formal compositions will also be studied.

Technical knowledge of music is not necessary for an enjoyment of the lecture according to Professor Lambert.

Friday, 7th hour, Prof. Rodman Sullivan, department of economics, will lecture on "Totalitarian Trade Methods" in room 101, White Hall.

Reinhardt, son of Edward Reinhardt, Louisville, is a junior in the commerce college. He received a letter in football.

Lafferty To Conduct Open Lecture On Parliamentary Law

Mrs. W. T. Lafferty, prominent club woman and authority on parliamentary procedure, will conduct a parliamentary law class Thursday at 4 o'clock in room 204 of the Student Union building. This course, under the auspices of Mortar Board, has been presented for the past few years.

Mrs. Lafferty considers the particular problems of parliamentary procedure in campus groups and clarifies the more difficult points of Robert's Rules of Order. She encourages questions and demonstrates the correct forms for conducting a meeting and carrying on discussion in a group.

Parliamentary procedure forms one section of the examination for eligibility for Student Government offices. This conference will be a great aid to future candidates who expect to take the examination this spring. Mrs. Lafferty will also give valuable pointers in carrying on a debate or ending unnecessary discussion in a meeting.

This conference is open to all University students.

TOMORROW AT THIRD HOUR Classes Dismissed For Celebration In Memorial Hall

A special University convocation honoring the victorious Wildcat basketball team will be held at 10 a. m. tomorrow in Memorial hall. It was announced yesterday afternoon by President Herman L. Donovan.

The Kiwanis Club is giving a dinner for the members of the championship Kentucky basketball team today at the Phoenix Hotel—12:15.

All regularly scheduled classes for the third hour will be dismissed for the meeting, the University administration said.

Although no definite plans for the convocation have been announced, it was hinted yesterday that speeches will be made by President Donovan, Bernie Shively, athletic director, and basketball coach Adolph Rupp.

Sunday, when the train carrying the Wildcat basketball team arrived at Union station, about 100 students and a part of the band met them. Two Sky cheerleaders led cheering and singing.

Kentucky has won three of the last four Southeastern conference tournaments.

A similar victory convocation was held after the Kentucky team won the Southeastern conference tournament two years ago at Knoxville. Staged in Alumni gymnasium, the convocation was attended by over three-fourths of the student body and the band.

Girls' Glee Club Presents Concert Sunday

By WILYAH GRAVES

A balanced and pleasing blend of voices was shown in the girls' glee club concert given Sunday at Memorial hall under the direction of Mildred Lewis. Interpretation and dynamics were expressed artistically.

This year there were more voices in the glee club than in previous years. The result was the production of a better tone quality.

After the audience and glee club had sung our national anthem the glee club sang the grand and magnificent "Omnipotence" by Schubert, followed by the light gay tune, "My Mother Bids Me Blind My Hair" by Haydn.

In the second group, "Snowflakes" by Cimara was a tone picture painted very beautifully by the glee club with Mary Virginia Fulcher as soprano soloist.

The third group included Berceuse from "Jocelyn," "Ave Maria," and "Tamborin," cello solos played most skillfully by Byron Harsh.

Accepted enthusiastically was the fourth group of songs consisting of "Brook in the Forest," by Bircsak; "Dream Song," by Warford with soprano solo sung by Anita Roos; and Anne Feltz; and a gay modern waltz, "Let My Song Fill Your Heart" by Charles.

"Winter and Spring" which was arranged by the glee club's accompanist, Adele Gensemer, was sung in the last group. A novelty in this group was "The Village Gossip" which is a Roumanian folk song. Enjoyed very much by the audience was the last number which was a medley of songs representing the four branches of the armed service: the navy, army, marines, and air corps.

The entire program was composed of

The Omnipotence I Schubert-Spueker
My Mother Bids Me Blind My Hair Haydn

Oh Lost And By The Wind Grieved...

About this time of year, if you look closely, you can see the lights flicker out to the freshmen class.

One by one you can see the freshmen girls begin to fade.

If you watch them at the dances or talk to them in the Union, you can't help but notice the ever-increasing plumpiness, the too-often repeated phrase, the forced smile. You can see them straining to act like they used to act when they were fresh and unpressed, but it rings false. They are just not the same.

All in all, it's about the saddest story we know, even sadder because it happens year after year.

Now, when she came to the University in the fall, Sunny Martin (that was her real name, given her by her grandmother, and all the girls thought it was so cute) was just about the typical freshman girl.

Back home she had been about as popular as a girl could be in the small town high school, had played the lead in the senior play, and was considered nice looking.

The first few days, she was practically lost. Everything was so big and so wonderful. She went to the YMCA parties and met some other freshmen boys and girls, and once Jerry Slater, a boy from back home who was a junior now, took her to a rush dance at his fraternity. Everything was just so exciting. Sunny had to write long letters to her mother to tell her about them.

And especially there was a boy who had English with her. His name was Henry and he was sort of shy, like some of the boys back home. She always felt so at home with Henry, and she liked to study with him in the library and drink Pepsi-Colas at Jones Box-Ball afterward.

But for really being thrilled she would rather go to the fraternity house with Jerry. He took her there more and more now, and although she couldn't understand the funny remarks the boys were making all the time, she laughed and always had such a wonderful time. She got to know more and more fraternity boys, and they always gave her such a big rush at the Union dances.

And the girls at the sorority were so nice too. They got her dates with other fraternity men and told her how the people in the Grill all said she was so cute, and how everyone laughed when she couldn't catch on to the jokes. They taught her a lot of other things too, how to play bridge and to fix her hair right, how to put makeup on so it would look good in the bright lights at the dances and how to wear cute ribbons in her hair.

For Sunny it was all so wonderful. All the things she had read about in Mademoiselle really were true, and they were really happening to her. It was just like the magazines.

And the boys were always calling her up and sitting at her table in the Grill. She always got such a big rush at the dances.

The girls at the sorority told her it was her cute line that got them, and Sunny decided that Yes, that must be it. She knew from Mademoiselle that boys liked girls who are cute, and she realized that that was why they liked her.

And so, Sunny decided that she was the cute type, and began paying special attention to the pictures in Mademoiselle which showed how cute type girls should dress. Before long she began to look just like the cute type girls and she began to act like she thought cute type girls should act. Around the sorority she learned how to be coy and make cute remarks to flatter the boys. She began to act like she didn't get the point of a boy's joke, even though she did, and they always laughed and said she was so cute and had to explain to her. She knew lots of other cute tricks, too.

Of course, she didn't have time to go to the library with Henry any more. In fact she hardly ever saw him except in the English class. She wouldn't even think of asking him to the sorority for open house, because he was so quiet and none of the girls had ever heard of him. And he really was sort of country-fied, just like the boys back home.

And so for Sunny it was a long round of parties and dances and bridge in the Grill. Just thousands of boys, thousands of jokes, over and over again.

Along about February, as you might expect, the change came over Sunny Martin. The newness began to wear off. The dances at the fraternity houses were the same over and over. At the Union it was the same thing over and over. The boys smoking cigarettes and talking smart talk and saying the same things over and over. The girls at the sorority talking about the same people and the same things and the bridge games the same thing over and over.

And all the time she had to keep being cute, because that was why she was popular.

She felt the change in herself. She kept up smiling, but she didn't mean it. She kept up laughing, but it sounded false. She kept up being cute, but it made her sick. She knew she wasn't the same Sunny

Martin who had come to school in the fall. She was a fake, a phonetic, artificial, a front. But she had to be cute, because that was why she was popular.

Soon the telephone calls began to come less and less, the stags took their no-breaks with someone else, the boys in the Grill sat at someone else's table. She thought she ought to study this semester and make a standing to get initiated. But she found she couldn't. And so she went back to the Grill and played bridge and had to be cute some more.

It got to be sickening.

Well, as the semester wore on things got worse, and she wanted to get away. But when she got home for the summer it was just as bad. She couldn't enjoy the countryfied things around there, and the boys, my God, they were so dumb.

The night her father told her he couldn't send her back to school because she hadn't made a standing, Sunny Martin cried for a long time. It was so awful. She didn't want to stay, but she didn't want to go back either.

For a year Sunny stayed around home. For a long time she wouldn't talk to any of the local people unless she positively had to; she grumbled at her parents. She got a few letters from the girls in the sorority, but pretty soon they got to be too busy to write her.

Slowly though, she came out of it. I hear. She began to be interested in the church and in reading, and took a class of young children in Sunday School. The women at the church asked her to make a talk before the Book Club.

And so she's back home again now. The last I heard of Sunny she was married to the son of the man who owns the feed store there in town. She talks to the neighbors over the fence on summer nights and goes to prayer meetings on Wednesdays. The folks around town say she is the most active member of Bundles for Britain and is expected to be elected president of the Baptist Women's Auxiliary some day.

They say Mrs. Greenfield—that's her name now—doesn't often mention that she used to go to the University. They say she doesn't talk much about it.

But I know the woman who lives next door to her, and she tells me that even today sometimes, on spring evenings when Mr. Greenfield is working late at the feed store, she can see her in the living room, with the fire down low and the bridge lamp pulled up close, turning slowly through the pages of Mademoiselle, and with tears in her eyes.

This Book Was Just Too Valuable To Steal

ON THE COLLEGE FRONT By JIMMY HURT

A reference book disappeared from the library of a physics prof at Marshall college and the prof, much concerned at the loss of a valuable volume, attempted to locate it.

The search proved fruitless and gradually the incident slipped from mind—that is until he discovered the lost manual one day while looking on the shelf. As he picked it up to examine it more closely, a piece of paper fell from between the pages onto the floor.

On it was this unusual message from a troubled conscience:

I took this book from your bookcase without checking it out some time ago. I am returning it after finding it too valuable to be stolen from the department.

BOOKWORM

STILL A GOOD TERM PAPER

Northwestern's Purple Parrot told of a student who turned in a 20-year-old term paper from his fraternity's files. He got an A minus, and a note from his prof which, roughly, ran like this: "This was an A paper when I wrote it, and, by golly, it's still worth an A minus!"

HOW TO CATCH UP ON BACK WORK

Up at Lehigh University in Pennsylvania, a young man worked out a beautiful plan.

He went to a friend and said, "You do the work in Course A and I'll do the work in Course B and we'll trade." That being oked with the party of the second part, he went on to another friend and said, "You do the work in course B and I'll do the work in course A and we'll exchange."

Then he went to sleep while those two other guys went out and did his work. He managed the trading beautifully, but the two other guys got together afterwards. We'll stop here because so far it makes a beautiful story.

WELDING COURSE FOR WOMEN SLATED

Purdue is offering a twelve week welding course to the women. There will be no charge for the course, nor will any college credit be given, but nevertheless there is an opportunity for 35 women with brawn to come to the front for their country. Co-ed applications will receive first consideration, even over applications of faculty women.

Complaint Against Carnegie Room Still Unanswered

To The Editor of The Kernel:

Defenders of the Carnegie record library's prevailing administrative policy seem willing to discuss anything but the issue at hand, Mr. J. Parker LaBach's recent letter, bristling with dignity and irrelevant statistics, continued to duck the charges originally aimed at the library management.

Mr. LaBach, who, I believe, plays a bass fiddle pretty well in his spare time, made no effort to deny the fact that music-majors (by his own figures the smallest group habituating the library) have privileges not granted to other students. He did not deny it because he could not.

Most of his prolixity spent itself in describing, with the aid of algebra, the splendid work of the Carnegie library. As all of us are already thoroughly convinced of the unsalable merit of the institution, and as I have a sincere personal appreciation of the advantages I am occasionally able to obtain from it, this seemed beside the point. Certainly, it was an evasion of the question under debate.

My condemnation was leveled directly at the system of minority rule, but nobody on the other side seems to want to talk about that. Instead, by the way, I get something about bread and meat from a Mr. Prater and now this inspired treasurer's report from Mr. LaBach.

Now, about Mr. LaBach's statistics: according to them, the music-majors theoretically could monopolize 50 per cent of the library's playing time (see Paragraph Three of his manifesto). He confesses that music students receive priority and precedence even though, by his own mathematics, they are definitely in the minority. It is my contention that this practice is unfair and not in accordance with the principles on which the library was founded.

Mr. LaBach avowed that recommendations for the improvement of the collection's services are welcomed, but the library administration doesn't seem to have fallen all over itself to follow my suggestion, which continues to be to the effect that this abuse be corrected.

DON IRVINE

Sidelights Of The Tourney

VICE OF THE PEOPLE By ROY STURFORD

It's great to be a winner!

Two long years I have traveled with Kentucky teams—football and basketball—and now, at long last, I know how it feels to be a winner.

Kentucky's big blue basketball team admittedly not the most talented to represent the blue and white, but certainly the most determined and spirited ever to carry the Kentucky colors returned home Sunday the victors—the champions.

"If these kids win, it will be because they want to win and not because they're a great team."

Coach Adolph Rupp said that ten days before the tournament.

And during the tourney several times, they appeared to be down and at one time the count had reached ten-10 to 0 in Auburn's favor in the semi-finals—but they came back to emerge the winners, 10 to 31.

Every day since early October, I have watched the boys practice. They have had a lot of disappointments—the Notre Dame game, and the Ohio State game, both lost by scores that could have gone either way.

Regardless of the outcome of a Saturday night game, they were always back Sunday afternoon for a short session. They were the kind of boys who didn't mind a little work.

They wanted to win and they won!

The Kernel's Bob Adair and R. C. Smith, sports editor of the Orange and White, Tennessee's student paper, have been, as you probably know, carrying on a verbal war in their columns. They have been very uncompromising of each other.

Each knew that the other would be at the tournament. They had never been introduced, in fact, they had never even seen each other.

By coincidence, naturally, the man in charge of the press table placed Adair and Smith side by side.

During the opening round of the tournament they talked and exchanged comments. Adair didn't know he was talking to Smith and Smith never suspected Adair of being Adair.

Imagine their surprise when they were introduced by a newspaperman. They both blushed and stuttered like two old maids after a proposal.

And then there's the story about the eight students who left for Louisville Thursday and never saw a game. Early Monday they were still among the missing.

Picturesque speech contributed by Tom Anderson, sports editor of The Knoxville Journal: "Big, bad, St. Bernard-like Johnny Maier." We understand that Maier, Tennessee's basketball coach, resents Anderson's description.

After the Auburn-Kentucky semi-final fray, one southern sports writer showed his indignation at the officials and Adolph Rupp's tactics by signing his dateline "Ruppville," Ky.—(for merely Louisville).

Dorsey Records Only Bright Spot Among Dull Releases

MUSICAL MUTILERINGS By BILL PENICK

Best disc to reach the ears of this listener in the past few months has been Tommy Dorsey's new recording of Cole Porter's old favorite What Is This Thing Called Love. This in our opinion is one of the finest written and TD's waxing rates 1st among recordings of the number. Some solid Dorsey trombone, superb phrasing by brass, a trumpet ride by Ziggy Elman, and a final chorus by the whole band are the highlights.

This one has been recorded for some time but was released only last week for retail sale.

Reverse side is another old one, Love Leads A Little Gift of Roses, with vocalist Ken Curtis, borrowed from Shep Fields for this side, singing some pretty lyrics. Again TD's trombone is a high-light. This man is undoubtedly the most consistently good musician on wax today.

Artie Shaw's latest releases are definitely not up to his usual standards. Titles were Absent Minded Moon, Hindustan and Somebody Nobody Loves. Hindustan is a complicated arrangement of an old jump tune, while the other two are pops, neither very good. Artie plays a fair clarinet on Somebody but all sides are lacking the usual spark.

The last few records put out under Glenn Miller's name will probably go down in music history as being among the worst he's ever played. The titles we are referring to in particular are Keep 'Em Flying and Let's Have Another Cup o' Coffee. Flying features some wild but pointless blowing of the brass with the rhythm section leading the whole band on a wild chase which goes nowhere in particular, Coffee, a poor attempt at strengthening Pan American relations, is sung by Marion Hutton and the Modernaires in North American style—then saxist Ernie Caceres goes south of the border with his vocal (he should stay there).

Reverse is a fair jump tune Chip Off the Old Block, featuring some good section work by the band.

Hal McIntyre, ex-Millerite, has in less than two months gathered a fine group of young musicians and has molded a fine band. Featured instrumentalists are former Goodman saxman Dave Matthews and Woody Herman's old trumpeter Steady Nelson.

Backgrounds Of War And Peace Spengler Would Have Said 'I Told You So'

By RICHARD P. ADAMS
Department of English

The title of Oswald Spengler's great work, The Decline of the West, is somewhat misleading. His basic purpose was to show that human history has consisted of a number of separate cultural developments, and not of a single, straight-line series of events. Prominent historians are now engaged in documenting his work.

A culture, according to the Spengler theory, develops very much as an individual man, through periods of youth, maturity, and old age. Secondly, Spengler wanted to discover the relative position of the Western culture, which includes all the Western European nations and America; to determine how much of its life had passed and how much was still in the future.

Spengler distinguished eight distinct cultures: the Egyptian, the Mesopotamian, the Chinese, the Hindu, are Greco-Roman, the Arabian, the Mexican (pre-conquest), and the Western. Toynbee, Flinders Petrie, and others have counted more.

ALL THE SAME

In all cultures, the duration and general course of development have been strikingly similar.

Each one has experienced the slow building and the gradual breaking down of formal organization in economics, politics, social structure, and the arts.

Each one, in the process of growing old, has gone through the period of "contending states," followed by dictatorship and the complete federation of a world-state embracing the whole culture. This to him is always accompanied by

Contending states, personal histories always come at this time, he declares world-pacifism and personal struggles for power on the part of the stronger and more ambitious men. Spengler has been accused of being a propagandist for Nazi ideas; but, though he predicted their coming, he did not, in general, approve.

THE PRESENT

We are at present, according to Spengler, living late in the period of "contending states." State imperialism and state-imperialism are about over; the synthesis is beginning that will soon result in the complete integration, politically as well as economically and ideologically, of all the nations of the West and their dependencies; that is, of the whole world.

The process so far has been very similar to that which led through the Punic and Hellenistic wars to the final integration of the then known world under the Romans, or to the process that led by way of bitter totalitarian wars to the final integration of China under the emperor Hwang-ni. In Spengler's estimate, Alexander the Great is approximately contemporary with Napoleon. Hitler with Julius Caesar.

It would be wrong, therefore, to compare Hitler to Napoleon in all respects. Hitler's career seems, like Caesar's, to mark the final turning point in the political life of our culture; the one that leads directly or indirectly to the decadent rule of the individual over all its people and its lands.

It is not quite accurate to say that Spengler "predicted" the future development of our culture. What he did do was to generalize on the development of other cultures at approximately the same level.

Unless our culture is different from all the rest, New York will some day be another Samarra; London another Pataliputra. Samarra once extended for twenty miles along the Tigris and Pataliputra measured ten by two miles inside the walls. They are of interest today only to archeologists.

It is not quite accurate to say that Spengler "predicted" the future development of our culture. What he did do was to generalize on the development of other cultures at approximately the same level.

HIS ACCURACY

The accuracy of his generalizations is well illustrated by the following quotation, written before 1932 and based mainly on the development of the Greco-Roman civilization:

henceforth there are only private histories, private ambitions, the dreary feuds of Caesars for the private possession of the world.

"For world-peace which has often exists in fact involves the private renunciation of war on the part of the immense majority, but along with it involves an unavowed booby of others who do not renounce it. It begins with the State-destroying wish for universal reconciliation and it ends in nobody's moving a finger so long as misfortune only touches his neighbor."

20 YEARS BEFORE MUNICH

There could be no better description of the Munich situation than this, written almost twenty years before the event. And it is the Munich relationship that is the coming, growing thing.

People are becoming less and less willing to fight for justice and democracy and the general conditions of human decency. They are becoming more and more willing to submit to the conqueror, whoever he may finally be.

They call it monstrous pacifism. Spengler called it blind, stupid cowardice. Spengler demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt, I think, that no peace can ever be built on the principle of non-resistance; the French nation furnished another bit of evidence for the proposition that we can maintain the ordinary benefits of peace only by a hard-headed willingness to fight when they are threatened.

Ultimately, as Harry Scherman points out in The Last Best Hope of Earth, "the ultimate development will come, it is up to us to make it as democratic and as just and as unselfish as possible."

The Decline of the West is available in the main library and a much shorter and more readable collection of Spenglerian quotations is gathered in Today and Destiny by Dakin, which is in the English Department's paper library.

Stamps With No PO Value

LIFE'S DAILY PARADE By JAY WILSON

Some people have been offering subtle warnings about Officer Kelly's wrath over a publicity story for the defense stamp sales in the Union building. Kelly, who was dubbed a "self-styled Sherlock," has not confirmed these stories. In fact, I throw my perch in the tree in honor of McVey hall distinctly heard Officer Kelly say "what if the stamps were stolen? You couldn't mail anything with them, anyway."

It would be difficult for me to be in awe of Officer Kelly, anyway. Since the last draft registration I have been in mortal fear of being investigated by the F. B. I. Night after night I wake up with J. Edgar Hoover jumping all my chest—and all because of the loss of "a little white card." REASON: This particular card implies the bearer has registered (P. S. It was later found on the floor.)

Taking the recent "salary ruling" limiting prof's annual salaries to $5,000 to heart, Frank D. Peterson, University comptroller, solemnly placed a tin cup on his desk in the Administration building. Caption: "Drop Faculty donations Here."

The usual dignity of Memorial hall was interrupted Sunday afternoon when one of the heads along the back row of the women's glee club, suddenly disappeared. Many of the audience realized how high the back seats are from the floor and how easy it is for them to slip off the platform. Consequently they, was universal concern for the girl. A few minutes later, however, the girl, Leota Meade, arts and sciences freshman from Danville, reappeared in her position. She had fainted.

Is this lady's face red? A want ad in last Tuesday's Kernel stated: "Lost: A red ladies purse. . . . What we are trying to figure out is, Which was red—and why?"

Looking down the musical avenue in the Daily Parade we meant to congratulate the music room diletts for deciding to cease in what appeared to be a vain attempt to get the "last word." Both sides have their arguments and they have been presented—so why the "serial"? It seemed to me that it was high time it stopped, especially since there was some danger that the postal authorities would intervene for gross disregard of the U. S. mail system, just whom they would sue (the writer, the Kernel, or the reader) is the problem. As we said, we want to congratulate the "red" writers but that was before I was told we had another letter today.

Photographers: "Watch and see the dicker bird."

Child: "Just pay attention to your exposure so that you don't ruin the plate."

Brush And Pencil Club Exhibit Displays Faculty, Student Art

By GAIL KIRN

The eleventh showing of Kentucky artists' works by the Brush and Pencil club in the gallery of the art department brings before the public an interesting array of work from faculty members, students and former students of the University.

From the staff of the art department are the portrait in oils and a stencil painting from Edward Fisk. This design is a beautiful example of what can be done with stencil printing.

Mr. Rannels exhibits three landscapes, all quite restful in color and conception, the nicest of which is Rocks in Rain, painted in cool greys and rich browns.

A large oil-on-canvas painting, Cincinaria, is shown by Ann W. Callahan. This is a heavily brilliant painting in form and color; the silver tonality of the color of the forms is repeated in the soft silver of the frame.

Raymond Barnhart exhibits a tempera painting, which, to be completely appreciated, must be considered frame and all as a designed integrated whole.

Christine Brown, a former student of the University Art Department, shows her first tempera panel, Gardenia Seller, the drawing for which was exhibited last fall at the Union building under the auspices of the Student Art committee. Tempera is a medium ideally suited for a draftsman, and one which Miss Brown handles excellently well. The grain of the wood mat of the frame is a decided adjunct of the design of the picture itself. This frame incidentally was made in the buildings and grounds department by Harry Mefford, who is seen through the eyes of D'Ann Calhoun, also a former student, in another painting exhibited.

Two competent artists are Katherine McGinnis and Theresa Newhoff. Teachers of art now, they were once students in the department. Several of their landscapes, still-life, and portraits, are now on exhibit.

Mrs. Rannels has three portraits, all excellent. The little Sojra may be appreciated for the bubbling sparkling childlike, and the portrait of Mr. Rannels for the sympathetic and extremely personal handling of the characterization. Beside Mrs. Rannels' exhibit are paintings by Frank Long, Katherine McGinnis and Catherine McMullen.

Dr. Huntley Dupre exhibits three very interesting oils.

Frances Pollock, a recent student at the department and contributor of many cartoons for the Kernel exhibits two paintings; one in particular was very interesting indeed—briefly named, Monday. It is crisp and clear in color and extremely interesting in the use of prismatic forms.

Other students and recent students represented by lithographs, drawings, and oils are Jeanne Brown, Clay, Lancaster, Susan Jackson, Kate Pendleton, and Gail Kirn.

Ernst Johnson, the architect of many campus buildings, presents three skillfully done water colors: Dr. McVey, who always takes part in these exhibits, shows three clear-toned landscapes in watercolor. Dord Fitz of Richmond presents a portrait of President Donovan. Irene Cullis, a former student, now of Georgetown, is represented by a still-life which is quite striking and brilliant in color.

Other exhibitors include Fred Giles, John Jacob Niles, William Frazer, and Claude Jackson.

The exhibit will remain on view through March 31. The gallery will be open each week day from 8 a. m. to 5 p. m. and on Sunday afternoons from 2 to 5 o'clock p. m. The gallery will be open also in the evenings, Monday through Friday between 7 and 9 p. m.

War Prisoners To Receive Books From Money To Be Collected

The man in the prison camp, who will be aided by the money to be raised on the University campus next week, when a $1200 drive for funds will be launched, does not have the same needs as the refugee—food, clothing, and shelter. His is the problem of having time on his hands with nothing to do—of complete despair, loss of hope, loss of belief in the future.

Many of the prisoners were students or professors when the war broke out. Their problem is not food and clothing but morale. In the camps, it is said, there is great boredom, discouragement and low morale. Books, musical instruments, and recreational equipment are being sent to these prisoners by the World Student Service Fund.

A former student at Cambridge writes, "With nothing to do I felt my mind slipping away. I find I cannot concentrate for more than half an hour at a time." To such men as these have gone books and study materials.

Parcels, including over 4000 books, nearly 8000 notebooks, and 3800 pencils were sent to the prisoners last year. With these, "universities in captivity" have been organized. Classes are led by former professors or graduate students. Exchange language lessons are given and dozens of subjects studied—philosophy, horticulture, dentistry, medicine, literature, astronomy, mathematics, physics and theology.

"I want to send you my personal word of gratitude for all the good you have done my husband and his comrades," the wife of a French prisoner-of-war has written to the Fund office in New York city.

"My parcels have improved his daily fare—and that was necessary—but the books have secured so generously have been more useful; they have enabled him to keep his morale up, and to transform hard trials of captivity into a rich retreat of study, filled with work and contemplation. My husband is now the official correspondent of the European Student Relief committee in his camp, and he writes that the University is becoming more important every day."

In answer to a questionnaire recently received by the Relief committee, in Geneva, an English officer, who had arrived from Greece in a German camp, wrote: "I should like to reimburse you as soon as I am free. As a student, after the last war I took the humble part in helping to raise funds for European Student Relief, and I know that you can find good use for every pound subscribed. Therefore, I wish to treat as a loan my expenditure you may now incur on my behalf. It goes without saying that all of us here are most grateful for your offer of assistance in studies."

are prepared to be sent to students in prison camps by the World Student Service Fund.

Spring Hasn't Arrived But A Girl Can Turn His Fancy

By TONI

While spring may turn a young man's fancy to thoughts of you know what, it inevitably turns a young maid's thoughts to personal adornment. Actually it adds to the same score. The girl attempts to look more attractive so the boy next to her will notice that the weather is sunny, she is good-looking, the trees are budding, and she is good-looking.

Since spring has taken several detours in reaching Lexington, we are experiencing a between-season lull in which the weather is too cool for spring weather and too bright for the clothes we've been wearing all winter. The beginning of March finds us routine weary, and the skirts and sweaters begin to look like uniforms. The time is right for change, but we dislike donning our new spring outfits before the all-important Easter Sunday.

All your wardrobe needs is some face-lifting to bring it out of the winter rut and bridge the space from now until robin and crocus time.

Introduce new colors to your present wardrobe by adding a few short-sleeved sweaters in pastel hues, lighter skirts, and different blouses. Discover a new way of combining or blending colors, or match accessories in your favorite shade.

If you're tired of conventional skirts, you'll probably like some naive batiste blouses or a white pique blouse trimmed with rows of stitching. For variety, acquire a few checked gingham shirts with hair ribbons to match that will double duty with your summer slacks, come vacation.

Should your allowance be elastic enough to include a new jacket or two, be sure to investigate the new shorter length version that steers clear of severe tailoring and may be worn over dresses. Red and yellow are this year's most popular colors in the softer jackets.

Replace your saddle shoes with new moccasins or campus play-shoes in pale natural leathers or vivid colors. Nailheads, perforations, stitching, and lacings add interest.

For novelty, you might consider wearing a spray of ivy on your suit lapel, or a fluffy feather to echo another spot of the same color on your outfit, or a pine cone or two on your tweeds. When at a loss as to harmonizing a contrasting belt with our accessories, try a matching ribbon for your hat.

This year treat your wardrobe to some novel innovation even though it be as conservative as varying the white peter-pan collars you've been wearing with your cardigans with coarse cotton lace collars scented with a new floral cologne. A change from the usual order is still the best spring tonic we know.

Java is the mostly densely populated land mass in the world.

SPRING COMING:

1 out above collarless jacket follows the shorter length softer line dictates of spring fashion and may be worn over dresses.

The Sporting Way

BY BOB ADAIR

After the ball game is over . . . that is when the fans take over and play it the way they thought it should have been played . . . that is when the drug store coaches go to work . . . that is when the game is played over and over again. The Southeastern tournament is over and gossip runs full and strong. Now is the time for us to get in our news, views, and idle chatter, all of which has no effect upon what has already taken place.

Many fans, coaches, and others who make basketball the great game it is, seemed to think the tournament would have taken a different trend if big Chance of L. S. U. had not played Farzan on the run of the basket to make teammate McLeod's shot void in the Bayou Tigers battle with Alabama . . . If the shot had been allowed by referee Dan Lehman,

L. S. U. would have taken a 32-31 margin and probably the decision because game was forced into an overtime period when McLeod sank a free throw to tie the score at 31-31. . . Coach Harry Rabenhorst of L. S. U. protested vigorously as Lehman ruled that no player should touch the basket, but the decision stood and Alabama outscored the disturbed Tigers 14-0 in the overtime to win 45-31.

TENNESSEE SLIPPED

Tennessee followers routed for Kentucky in the Cats' first two battles, hoping to see the Vols trim the Big Blue in the finals but after Alabama upset their darlings they wanted to see Kentucky eliminated, regardless of what team beat them . . . R. C. Smith, the voice of the Vols, with whom we have been feuding lately, was in full voice during every Wildcat game but finally succumbed to Joe Hodges' and Roy Stenfort's ribbing . . . The one that got him came after the mighty Vols had fallen and Hodges asked "What's the matter Smith, wasn't the floor slick enough?"

It seemed strange to us that Kenny England was not mentioned on the All-Tournament team. Many observers opined that Jim King should be placed at center but when the final count was made Jim was placed on the second five . . . Since the team selected by the writers, coaches, and officials was not entirely to our liking, three centers being placed on the first five, we will attempt to name an All-tourney team of our

SIGMA NU LOSES TO UNDEFEATED ATO NET TEAM

Eblen Paces ATQ With Eight Points
Nollau Makes Five

Intramural activity gave way to the big games in Louisville over the week-end, but an important game was played Thursday evening in Alumni gym, when the ATOs defeated the Sigma Nus to knock the latter from the undefeated ranks.

Charley Eblen paced the winners by tossing in three fielders, and three fouls for a total of eight points, followed by Nollau with five and Spence with four. Wilson made four to lead the Sigma Nus.

This victory marked the ATOs' fifth straight win, and left them as the only undefeated team in Division 2 of the fraternity league. Sigma Nu has won four and lost one.

C. W. Hackensmith has announced that badminton entries have been coming in rather slow, and that the entry date has been extended until six o'clock this evening. No entries will be accepted later than this date.

The first round of ping pong matches must be played before March fifth, the intramural department also announced.

'Chat And Nibble' Is 'Cat And Giggle' In Women's Dorms

"Chat and Nibble Hour" in the women's dormitories could just as appropriately be tagged "Cat and Giggle Hour". News flashes come to the rest of us via the radio; but girls can hear the latest each evening from 9:30 to 10:30 in the Jewell dining room where, while putting their curlers in, they can munch anything from hot dogs to crackerjacks.

Nettie Riggs, a student at the University three years ago, first conceived the idea of a place where women of the three halls could purchase an evening snack, taking the place of that favorite pastime at home—raiding the ice-box. The success of the brainstorm is evident by the trail of pale faces in house-coats which keep the corridors dusted.

There is a slump on Saturday ("pitchin'" night) but "stay in" Mondays are popular as home-runs.

Martha Marlow, student in charge of the selling, commented that the attendance varied from 15 to 130 each night, but that during exam week "just everybody comes".

KERNEL POLL

What They Think

By PAT SNIDER

"What's your opinion of the open classes?"

Robert Kibler, agriculture junior—"An open class broadens the student who is taking a more or less specialized course."

Ben Biggerstaff, commerce freshman—"I think they're a marvellous contribution to education."

Betty Fraysure, A & S freshman—"They're good because they require no study."

Some Students Didn't Go Just For The Tourney

By JOE HODGES

In sporting way, there was more going on in Louisville than the annual Southeastern tournament. Although the teams in the armory showed themselves excellently, in some cases they were forced to take second place to frivolity.

For instance, there was the carload that left Lexington Friday afternoon in order to witness a good deal of the tourney. Unfortunately, they didn't see a single game even though they were in walking distance of the armory.

Perhaps this wasn't so bad when you think of the local student who broke into tears after the Tennessee-Alabama engagement. He thought that Alabama had defeated Kentucky, and couldn't understand why the Big Blue came out on the floor to play a team called Auburn in the second semi-final game.

Too, the beautiful blond in the cottage made all Kentucky males wish they had left their dates at home. For the stings along, nothing could have been better. Conversation about dinner time Saturday went something about like this: "Do you think we can take that 'Bama team tonight?" Answer: "Huh, and have you noticed that blond at the cottage?"

Harold Harris, Knoxville sportswriter, was so blue after the first semi-final engagement, one could hear his gizzard telling his liver to move over. You could tell by the solemn crowd that we were in sympathy with him.

Elevator boys at the various hotels took one more beating. After the final game, elevators were so packed that riders acknowledged for once the trying life a sardine leads, and the elevator operators had to take the blame. On one trip, every rider hollered out his floor number at the same time. The colored operator got so befuddled, he ran the thing almost past the top floor. One looped rider shouted that he had passed his floor three times—he wasn't kidding either.

The hotel detective that got his arm caught in a door which was slammed in his face was really mad. However, after much persuasion, and shedding of tears, he took it without doing anything drastic. His good nature was greatly appreciated.

All in all, it was a tournament to go down in history . . . in spite of the fact that the faces of several "lives of the party" were missing.

And that blond, too. She wasn't bad at all. Not bad at all.

Dr. Harry Best Publishes New Book On Soviet Russia

Visiting Soviet Russia has provided Dr. Harry Best, head of the department of sociology, material for his recently published book, "The Soviet Experiment." The volume, off the press in December, is based upon reading, conversations with persons who have been to Russia, and personal observations made on his visit to that country.

Written in clear, concise language, the work, which is relatively brief, enables the man in the street and the college student to obtain a wider and clearer understanding of what has happened in Soviet Russia.

Having pointed out that the socialist state is a great governmental experiment not yet completed, the author discusses both the advantages and the disadvantages of the system.

Beginning with a discussion of the forces which led to the formation of the Union, the author continues by explaining the actual structure of the government. Then follows a dissertation on the production, education, general culture and material well-being, moral and religious attitudes, and democracy in the Soviet State.

Dr. Best, who received his Ph. D. from Columbia University, came to the University in 1919. Previously he had been a worker in the University Settlement, New York. He is the author of six other books and has another, "Deafness and the Deaf in the United States," forthcoming.

ACTING OFFERS BEST OPENING

"Radio has ignored women," Mrs. Mary Gaunt West, radio editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, told a group of students attending her discussion on the opportunities for women in radio.

Acting in radio drama offers the best opportunities, the speaker said, since script writing is limited to specialists and technical radio work requires much engineering experience.

"If you're looking for remuneration, prepare yourself for soap opera," Mrs. West declared.

Mrs. West said that although the war had opened jobs for women news commentators, the general effect of the conflict had not increased employment openings in the field because most male radio workers were deferred from selective service because of the technical nature of their work.

Script writing is not such a promising specialty, the speaker said, because sponsors require adherence to particular selling programs and discourage originality.

A SIMPLE BIT OF REASONING

If the University were to announce that all student publications cease, the student body would be quick to rise and protest. Student publications here at Kentucky, just as anywhere in America, are dependent on the students themselves. They must edit, they read and they support.

The success of student publications, financially, directly depends upon the students. The money paid by the student for his copies is trifling compared to the cost of running the individual newspaper. The important source of revenue comes from advertising, national and local.

Local merchants are always willing and ready to advertise as long as they feel their advertisements are being observed, and acted upon. Why not make it a habit of reading the advertising sections of your publications, as well as looking into the services and products of the advertiser? If their products and services are inferior, tell us . . . if they are satisfactory, patronize them.

After all, these merchant-advertisers enable the editors of your publications to give you better publications.
